

Following the recent press about tracking VOIP phones I think that tracking VOIP phones for e911 use or otherwise is not appropriate and infringes on the right of privacy given to any person in the USA. I DO believe that phones should have the OPTION of doing this, but by no means should this be a requirement.

I see the overhead with registering locations that service VOIP phones as a severe headache for the government and a further regulatory measure to police for compliance.

I also see the requirement to require e911 or location tracking devices embedded in VOIP phones as extraneous to using VOIP services, a "tax" for those who want to use a VOIP phone, but NOT for 911 services.

Please, do not require that a location be derived for VOIP phones !!
